

The wife of J. C. Clemons, proprietor of the Grand Central barber shop, died of consumption at Dallas, on the 2d. She leaves four children with her husband to mourn her loss. She had a large circle of friends in this community, not only among her own race, but with many white people who all highly esteemed her as a devoted wife, and a true christian woman.