

C. D. M'CLINTOCK BUILDER, DIES

Brother of Judge and Ray McClintock Succumbs to Pneumonia.

Charles David McClintock, active here 20 years ago as a civil engineer in railroad construction and as a building contractor and well known as a brother of county judge E. B. McClintock and H. R. McClintock, died in a local hospital Monday morning at 4:15 o'clock of pneumonia. His age was 48 years and four months. During the past two months he had been in charge of the construction of the large apartment house Judge McClintock is building on Montana street, near Cotton avenue.

He was ill only a week, having been attacked by the disease in his office in the First National bank building, from where he was taken to his home, 627 Upson avenue, and later he was removed to the hospital.

Builder of City Edifices.

Mr. McClintock was a son of the late Rev. Charles E. McClintock and Josephine McClintock. He was born in Decatur, Ill., November 1, 1868, and was educated in the schools of Illinois and Missouri. He was a civil and mechanical engineer and started in the profession under Henry Youngst, chief engineer of the St. Joseph, Mo., waterworks. He came to El Paso in 1897, and was one of the engineers in the construction of the Sierra Madre railroad, and later worked with J. L. Campbell on the construction of the El Paso & Northeastern railroad. He was a member of the firm of Madewell and McClintock, who designed and constructed the present city hall and central fire station in 1898.

Returns Here Last Year.

He later left El Paso, going to California, where he was the engineer in charge of right of way of the Western Pacific railroad into Oakland. He returned to El Paso in October, 1916, on a visit to his brothers, who persuaded him to again locate in El Paso.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel Buckingham McClintock, and one daughter, Aldyth McClintock, his mother, Mrs. Josephine McClintock, three brothers, E. B. McClintock and H. R. McClintock of El Paso, and L. R. McClintock, of Ohio, and three sisters, Mrs. Alfred Fraser and Mrs. E. W. King of El Paso, and Mrs. T. S. Scott of Jacksonville, Ill.

Funeral arrangements have not as yet been made.
